✓ Introduction

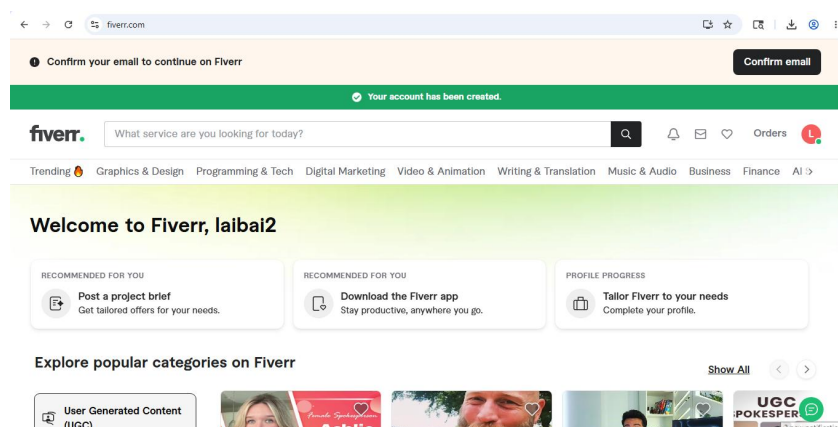

This report evaluates the usability of Fiverr using Human-Computer Interaction (HCI) usability principles.

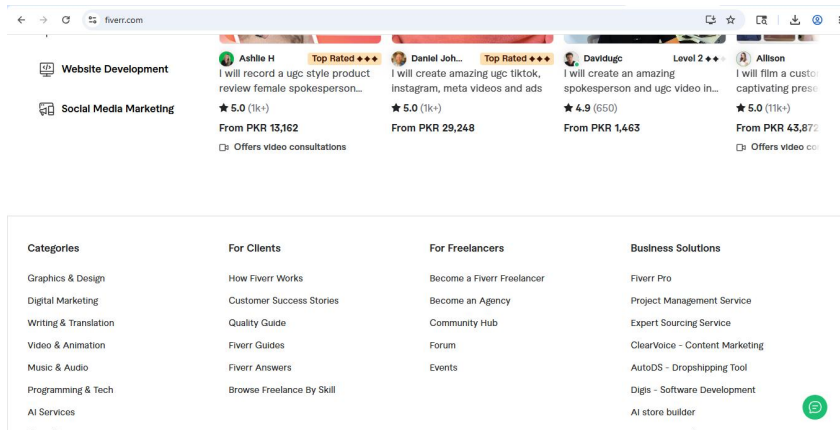

Fiverr is an online marketplace that connects freelancers with clients seeking digital services such as graphic design, programming, writing, video editing, and marketing. The platform is used by businesses, students, entrepreneurs, and professionals worldwide.

The purpose of this evaluation is to analyze how effectively Fiverr implements usability principles related to Learnability, Flexibility, and Robustness.

The evaluation focuses on:

- Homepage
- Search functionality
- Gig listings
- Seller profiles
- Navigation system
- Filtering and browsing features

❖ Website Selection Justification

Fiverr was selected because it is a feature-rich and globally recognized platform with a modern user interface. The website contains multiple interactive components including search systems, filters, profiles, navigation menus, and communication tools, making it suitable for detailed usability evaluation.

Additionally, Fiverr demonstrates many strong usability principles while still containing some limitations in flexibility and recoverability. This balance makes it an ideal case study for identifying both effective and insufficient usability implementations.
